Lecture: Disenchantment of Gender and Women in South Asia: Hermeneutical Engagement to the Poetics of Protests

Program*

10 am-11.30 am Introductions and Lecture

13.00-15.00 Workshop

This talk examines the varied hermeneutical approaches to gender(ed) resistances in contemporary times -- varied subversions and alike that builds on strong means of gender resilience and a culture of disenfranchised/subaltern, that escapes the potent symbols of essentialized identity, cultural authenticity and visions of society and nation in an ideological terrain shaped by Imperialism and modernization. This study, translated as an alternative to Anglophone liberal feminism, would attempt to critic the reformist discourses of colonial South Asia. Rather, hermeneutical arguments anchored around the idea of ‘community’, ‘nation’, ‘gender’, ‘representations’, ‘sexuality’ –a new way of the postcolonial governance and political imaginations to-be-a-Muslim woman or gender(ed) subaltern in South Asia.

Ahonaa Roy is an Associate Professor of Sociology and Social Anthropology at the Indian Institute of Technology, Bombay, India, and a Research Associate at the University of Pretoria, South Africa. She is also a Tata Fellow at the Centre of South Asian Studies, University of Cambridge (2022). She has published widely on sexuality and sexual health, social medicine, sexuality studies, masculinity studies, embodiment and body studies and gender and subaltern studies.
